Made in NC: Swan Quarter seafood company survives despite challenges

Owner Charles Carawan smiles at his son, Cory, as the last batch of crabs comes in for the day at Mattamuskeet Seafood in Swan Quarter, off the North Carolina coast.

The Carawan family, who live in this town of 324 better known for its ferry stop on the way to Ocracoke, have been in the crab business since the 1980s and have so far survived the industry's ups and downs. The only sure thing about their future is more ups and downs. Crabs from the sounds and intracoastal waterway are North Carolina's largest seafood industry with an overall value last year of $22.8 million. That's a third of the state's entire commercial seafood catch of $73 million of fish and shellfish in 2012.

In the mid-1990s, Mattamuskeet was one of about 45 crab processors in the state. Now there are 10.

Why? Imported crabmeat. Ninety-one percent of all the seafood Americans consume comes from overseas, according to the federal government. Crab is no different. While statistics aren't easily available for the handpicked fresh crabmeat that Mattamuskeet produces, 99 percent of the 66 million pounds of canned crabmeat sold in the United States in 2011 was imported, according to numbers shared by the National Fisheries Institute, a trade association based in Virginia. It is imported from countries such as China, Indonesia, Venezuela and Mexico.

Imported crabmeat can be more appealing to some consumers and chefs. It tends to be whiter in appearance, has less shell and a mild flavor – an asset for chefs who want to add their own seasonings. North Carolina crab-meat, by contrast, is grayer, can have more shell and has the classic sweet, briny flavor of crab.

The Carawans charge $22 a pound for jumbo lump crabmeat and $12 a pound for backfin meat. But there's a limit to how much they can charge because imported crabmeat is cheaper. "It pushes prices down," Cory Carawan said.

Wage debate ongoing

Mattamuskeet Seafood was started by Charles Carawan and several relatives in 1984. Beyond the crab processing company, they also owned an oyster company in Swan Quarter and a fish house in nearby Engelhard. The family sold the crab processing businesses to an investment company in the late 1990s but the new owners couldn't make it work and sold the company back to Charles Carawan in 2003.

Charles Carawan, 69, spent decades working on the water, catching oyster, shrimp and crab. He isn't much of a talker, but when he speaks it is with a Pamlico Sound brogue. His wife, Sherrie, does most of the talking about the challenges their business faces.

There's the debate in Washington, D.C., since 2008 about raising the wages for guest workers. Now, the federal Department of Labor sets the wage for the Carawans' workers at a minimum of $7.47 an hour. A recent proposal would have raised that to more than $11 an hour.

"There's just no way we could do that," Sherrie Carawan said.

The Carawans pay by the pound, allowing workers the chance to earn more than minimum wage. Salazar, the guest worker from Mexico's west coast, picks between 50 and 60 pounds of crabmeat a day. At $2.20 per pound, Salazar can earn between $400 to $600 a week after taxes.

Crab picking is physically demanding, mind-numbing work. Carawan said she cannot find willing local workers anymore.

"This type of work is not done by Americans," she said.

Carawan began hiring guest workers in 1986. She spent $14,000 earlier this spring to bring the workers by bus from Mexico, a cost that is repeated for the return trip in the fall. (She goes through the same process hiring guest workers to shuck oysters in the winter.)

She also hires a bus to take her workers each

Saturday from where they live on the Mattamuskeet property to nearby towns to go to the bank and grocery store.

Another challenge: There are fewer crabs being caught off the North Carolina coast. Last year, North Carolina fishermen landed 25 million pounds of blue crab – a steady decline from a peak of 65 million pounds in 1996. Plus, the weather can be a factor. This year's cold spring delayed the crab season by a couple of months.

Successful diversification

There are also distribution challenges. The majority of the Carawans' crabmeat – and most of North Carolina's seafood – is trucked up Interstate 95 to Washington, Baltimore and beyond. Only one company, Locals Seafood of Raleigh, takes their fresh crabmeat and crab cakes to the Triangle.

Cory Carawan said Harrah's Casino was interested in buying their crabmeat, but he couldn't find a cost-effective way to get their perishable product to Cherokee, seven hours away in the North Carolina mountains.

The Carawans have staked their survival on producing what they believe is a better product. Their meat is still handpicked, instead of by machine. It is sold fresh without using any preservatives. They buy only crabs caught by North Carolina fishermen and occasionally from sources in Virginia. Their workers pick 1,000 pounds a day in season and they sell out of it every day. "We've chosen to stay like this," Sherrie Carawan said.

They see their future in creating products with the crabmeat and continuing to diversify. They began making crab cakes in the 1990s and continue to make 1,000 a day. They hope to develop other products, such as a bite-sized crab cake called a "crab dab." They sell crab claws, which are shipped to the Gulf Coast. They sell shucked oysters in the winter. They have even applied for a grant to buy a machine to peel and devein shrimp.

Standing on the loading dock, showing off the company's crab steamer, Cory Carawan believes the company has a future.

"I think we'll be able to survive," he said.

Cheyenne Franks Represents TriCounty Telecom At FRS Tour

TriCounty Telecom sponsored Cheyenne Franks to attend the 21st Annual Foundation for Rural Service (FRS) Youth Tour in Washington, D.C., June 1-5, 2013. Franks, daughter of Petre and Kelley Franks and a rising senior at Northside High School, joined more than 100 high school students representing telecommunications cooperatives from across the United States to learn about the role of telecommunications in rural American communities.

During the tour, participants visited many historic sites throughout the D.C. metropolitan area, such as Arlington National Cemetery and the Smithsonian Museums, and were able to experience the city's monuments lit up during a night tour on the National Mall.

"There is so much to see and do in Washington, DC that you can't see it all in just one visit.

I've had such a great experience meeting new people from so many different states and discovering different cultures and places not through media but through my own eyes!", Franks said of her experience.

The students were also given an introduction to the governmental process and the telecommunications industry through educational sessions at the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association (NRECA) and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Participants then visited their state representative offices on Capitol Hill to give their perspective on the importance of telecommunications in rural America.

TriCounty Telecom, located in Belhaven, provides local telephone service in the Pinetown, Pike Road and Sidney exchanges of Beaufort, Hyde and Washington Counties. Cable TV, Internet access, Web Hosting and Design and Long Distance are also telecommunications services offered by TriCounty Telecom.

Treasured Scenes

Our goal is to create a unique series of tree ornaments that depict a new theme each year. By doing so, we intend to depict a different aspect of our town. This year's "Limited Edition" ornament is now available and is pictured at left. Collect the entire series for your children, give them to employees or simply collect them for your own enjoyment. These beautiful ornaments are also the perfect gift for friends or family that have moved out of the area. These ornaments are sure to become a cherished keepsake and heirloom. Since they are limited in quantity, they will be sold on a first come, first serve basis. Don't wait and miss out on this unique collectible!
